On the 300-and 400-foot levels the ore has been worked to a distance of 700 feet northeast of the shaft, without reaching the end of the shoot. The thickness ranges from 4 to 25 feet, with a probable average of 10 feet. Most of the ore above the 400-foot level has been stoped out, but on the 500-foot level only a little drifting has been done. Not much exploration work has been done, but there are several shafts which have cut probably workable deposits at other points along the lead. About a quarter of a mile northeast of the mine are three shafts, now caved in. It is said that 2y2 feet of good ore was encountered in one of these, and 6 feet in another. There is a twocompartment, timbered vertical shaft near the point where the lead...
