Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: . . . have proved the most popular, as the rush for this class of literature is confined more particularly to the week or two immediately preceding Christmas. It may be remarked, however, that the latest production from the pen of the late G. A. Henty, entitled By Conduct and Courage, has been especially marked as a favourite. The Foreign Correspondent, by A. E. Davies, has found a ready market. Amongst works of a humorous nature, the two foremost lines have proved to be The Humours of Scottish Life, by Dr. Gillespie, and the already well-known Extracts from Adams Diary, by Mark Twain. The magazines have proved a particularly heavy item, as the majority of them have been, in consequence of the Christmas enlargements, quite double their customary bulk. The sales of all the usually popular issues have been very large. Diaries, almanacs, and calendars of all descriptions for...
